SPUR's 10 years in San José

APRIL
SPUR establishes relationships at the City of San José and 1stACT Silicon Valley, planting the seed of SPUR San José.

JANUARY
SPUR hires its first San José Director, Leah Toeniskoetter.

SEPTEMBER
SPUR opens a storefront office in downtown San José. SWENSON, Gensler, Toeniskoetter Construction, the Knight Foundation and dozens of community partners contribute to make it possible.

JUNE
Santa Clara County voters pass the Measure B sales tax to enhance transit, highways, expressways and active transportation. SPUR endorses the measure and raises more than $100,000 to support its passage.

NOVEMBER
Following opposition from SPUR and other organizations, local commissioners reject Morgan Hill’s proposal to expand its urban service area, which would have led to more sprawl in Santa Clara County.

MARCH
Based on a study by SPUR and advocacy by the SJ Downtown Alliance, City Council agrees to change flight patterns at San José Mineta Airport and allow taller buildings to be built to create more jobs and housing near transit.

OCTOBER
Following Room for More: SPUR’s Housing Agenda for San José, Mayor Liccardo announces a plan to encourage new housing, targeting the construction of 25,000 new homes over the next five years, including at least 10,000 affordable homes.

JULY
SPUR takes transit agency leaders and elected officials on a tour of transit stations in the Netherlands and France, inspiring greater coordination between agencies and catalyzing the Diridon Integrated Station Concept plan.

FALL
Caltrain adopts its first long-range service vision to turn the commuter rail service into an all-day, frequent service that can support Silicon Valley and communities on the Peninsula, a key recommendation in SPUR's Caltrain Corridor Vision Plan.

NOVEMBER
After years of advocacy by SPUR and others, City Council votes to preserve Coyote Valley. The city changes zoning for portions of the valley from commercial and industrial use to agricultural and open space use to protect farming, wildlife and the environmental benefits the valley provides.

JANUARY
SPUR launches a virtual exhibition on the Guadalupe River Park, bringing together three years of research and conversation about its future, including reports on coexistence in public space, “rewilding” the river and equitable reinvestment in the park.

JUNE
City Council eliminates parking requirements for new housing. The outdated requirements add to the cost of new housing, encourage driving and hinder the city in meeting its climate goals. SPUR argued for the elimination of parking mandates and is one of 14 organizations calling for the change.
